September 26, 2014 – Alexandria, Virginia. Divorce Corp's Inaugural Family Law Reform Conference to Host an International Community at the Westin, Alexandria, from November 15-16, 2014.

After the acclaim and overwhelming public response to the 2014 documentary, Divorce Corp, a film that exposed the devastation caused by the U.S. divorce industry, many victims of the legal system cried out for action. The movie's director, Dr. Joseph (Joe) Sorge, responded by offering to host a conference on family law reform, focused on changing the laws in a way that will help the general public navigate this difficult and trying process.

The conference should interest anyone who recognizes the need for meaningful reform. Professionals, attorneys, mediators, therapists, parents, grandparents, students, coaches, academics, and activists alike will converge just outside Washington, D.C., prepared to connect, engage, share, and mobilize against injustice in the family courts.

Modern family roles and structures have evolved, yet the laws have not. In response, the Divorce Corp team has organized a unique convergence of speakers and workshops to both raise the public profile of the reform movement and lay the foundation for new laws. Topics to be addressed include; child custody, child support, alimony, judicial oversight, domestic violence, parental rights, children's rights, judicial bias, and mediation versus litigation.

Conference panel discussions and workshops will present a forum for learning, participating, and intermingling with others who share the focus and goal of real family law reform.
